Daniel C. Oren is an associate in Burke's Litigation and Eminent Domain/Inverse Condemnation Practice Groups. He has extensive experience defending individuals and entities in various litigation matters in both federal and state court.

Daniel's litigation experience includes civil rights, insurance coverage, commercial litigation, mass torts, products liability, and professional liability. Prior to joining Burke, Daniel defended public and quasi-public entities in construction litigation arising from publicly-bid, large-scale infrastructure projects.

Daniel has managed cases through pre-litigation and pre-trial phases, including conducting internal investigations, drafting responsive pleadings and discovery, conducting and defending fact and expert witness depositions, responding to subpoenas, negotiating and obtaining favorable settlements, and drafting dispositive motions. Daniel has brought several cases to the eve of trial within the past year, ultimately settling out of court or prevailing on motions for summary judgment.

Daniel also performs significant pro bono work, having represented indigent clients in Immigration Court.

While attending law school, Daniel served as an extern for Honorable William H. Alsup at the U.S. District Court for the Northern District of California, where he gained valuable experience drafting orders, conducting legal research, and assisting the judge during courtroom proceedings.

Outside of the office, Daniel enjoys technical rock climbing throughout the Sierra Nevada and gravel biking in Marin.
