

When Cops Post: What Happens when Law Enforcement Officers Get into Scrapes with Social Media

California Lawyer Magazine

Nearly everyone these days has a social media account and an opinion or photo they feel compelled to post. This compulsion to (over)share online has led to dozens of headlines involving employees being shown the door. Whether they badmouth a supervisor, post sexually suggestive images, share proprietary information, or cross a more subtle line, there are endless ways for employees to tweet their way to termination in 140 characters or less.

Download

RELATED PRACTICES

Employment Law and Litigation

RELATED PEOPLE

Private: Traci I. Park